Library Pathfinder: Sharks

Approximately 100 million sharks are killed every year. Shark teeth are used to make jewelry; shark cartilage is used to make fertilizers; shark skin is used to make leather; shark liver is used to make face cream, and shark fins are used to make soup. The mass killing of sharks creates a negative effect in the global environment. As apex predator populations decrease, mid-sized marine predator populations increase and can alter the marine food web by depleting prey populations and marine plant life which are necessary to sustain balance in marine ecosystems.
